Whether you long for comfy crushed velvet or glearning stainless steel, our metropolis has a designer who is right for your apartment. Here, our definitive list of the city's top interior talents, their signature looks, and their most well-known clients. Bear in mind: You won't find some of New York's biggest draws—Philip Johnson, David Sockwell—in the following pages, largely because their focus is existed the home (call them, however, if you've got a fabulous restaurant or museum to build). What you will find is a range of home-design legends and spand-corners, each of them ready to help you rethink how you live.

Glenn Gissler Design

36 East 22nd Street, eighth floor (212-228-9880) Gissler works in a classical-yet-modern idiom, balancing rooms with lighting and woodwork before he starts adding color ("earthy, muted, calm") or furniture ("antiques that have a sculptural presence"). Gissler's clients are often art dealers or collectors, as he's willing to let the art command the room. Glients: Michael Kors, Caroline Hirsch, Seth Abraham
